New Cybersecurity Regulations Introduced

The US government is pushing new cybersecurity regulations to improve reporting and transparency surrounding cyber attacks. In March 2022, the Cyber Incident Reporting for Critical Infrastructure Act (CIRCA) was signed into law and requires critical infrastructure companies to report covered cyber incidents and ransomware payments to the Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency (CISA). That same month, the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) proposed a rule requiring publicly listed companies to report material cybersecurity incidents to the SEC in addition to periodically reporting about organizations' policies and procedures to identify and manage cybersecurity risks.

The new requirements offer a strong opportunity for companies to not only review and update their cybersecurity incident response plan, but also to proactively invest in cyber resiliency principles, such as continuous visibility and verification of their network access policies. Preparedness and the ability to understand the impact of a breach in a timely manner will be key foundations to comply with the new reporting requirements and to keep operating despite being under threat.
